The New York City Department of Education developed the ASD Nest Program model from 2002 to 2005 in collaboration with New York University's Institute for Education & Social Policy and Prof. Shirley Cohen of Hunter College. The District 15/Region 8 planning team, led by Superintendent Carmen Farina, consisted of Ronni Ableman, Ruth Blankiet, David Cohen, Sherry Koslov, Ann Marie Lettieri-Baker and Steven Rosen, with facilitation by Dorothy Siegel of NYU and guidance from Prof. Shirley Cohen of Hunter College. Linda Wernikoff and Terry Feuer of the Office of Special Education School Improvement of the New York City Department of Education played key roles from its inception. Susan Brennan and Karen Engel developed the initial SDI curriculum.

When Supt. Farina became Deputy Chancellor of the New York City school system, she ensured that the Nest program would spread throughout New York City. The FAR Fund, Independence Community Foundation and the Overbrook and Tides Foundations provided funding for initial model development.

Since 2003, the NYC Department of Education has continuously supported program replication and development of the Nest model. At present, NYU Steinhardt's ASD Nest Support Project receives Department of Education funding to provide professional development for Nest staff, replicate the model and continually improve the capacity of Nest schools to best serve the needs of children with autism. Hunter College receives Department of Education funding to provide graduate-level training on autism and behavior to all Nest staff.
